Lotteries.

Tennessee has very stringent laws in opposition to lotteries.

There is scarcely a single method of patronizing these institutions that is not covered by restrictive and penal laws.

According to law a lottery cannot be drawn in the State, a man cannot buy a ticket, an agent dare not show his occupation as a vendor of lottery tickets, and yet there are more tickets openly sold and bought in Tennessee than in the mind of any man.

Thousands of dollars find their way every day to the various establishments in the country.

Formerly Havana reaped a golden harvest from the sale of tickets.

Now the lottery of Louisiana takes the place of that foreign office.

Alluring accounts of poor clerks, railroad hands and farmers, charm the eyes and the imagination of the young.

These successes are blazoned in every paper in the country, but nothing is said of the poor fellows who, in almost despair, take up a few cents like one shedding drops of blood, send them on and are never again heard of.

While one man draws a prize of ten or fifteen thousand dollars, there are a hundred thousand if not more men who get nothing.

The man who draws a prize seldom derives any permanent benefit from it.

There is one man, a young one, in West Tennessee, who drew a prize of $30,000.

He had a good place at the time in a prosperous business house, was happy and contented.

Crazed with such a stroke of fortune, he quit business and plunged into the most reckless extravagance.

He denied himself nothing that money could buy and soon became the victim of a set of sharpers whom he regarded as friends.

In two years time his money was all gone and he had acquired a taste for drinking and gambling, and was utterly incapable of any trustworthy occupation.

He could get no employment, and he is now one of the great army of dead-beats.

Another victim drew $10,000. He was at the time married to a beautiful girl, had a lucrative position, and with his wife and child, formed a happy household.

He belonged to one of the best families in the State and was a marvel of steadiness and sobriety.

But the money destroyed him. He believed it inexhaustible and drew from it recklessly.

He went into business on his own account, but soon acquired habits of dissipation, gambled and drank to excess.

He, like the other, very early found the bottom of his purse, lost his business, made several efforts at reform, but all were abortive, and finally he separated from the dear woman and went off to no one knows where.

There are a great number of such many who could cite of the successful lottery patrons.

The poor widow scrapes together, by close economy, the money to buy tickets and is still poorer from the blank she gets.

One man in this county actually spent a good patrimony in trying to get capital prizes he never got.

He taught school, and spent all his fees in the same way.

He bought tickets every day; it became a life's passion, worse than drinking or gambling; followed it up for sixty years and never drew one single dollar, and finally went to his grave with the passion unabated.

The amounts he had dissipated in that way would have made a small fortune.

For every dollar drawn from a lottery there are a thousand blanks, if not more.

And yet there is something so attractive, so promising for the next time, that the devotee never ceases to worship at the shrine.

Disappointments in receipts for any other business would deter men from investing, but in the lottery they never will believe that they will draw a blank until it comes, and then they will have better luck next time.

The South's Triumph.

The extraordinary development of industries in the Southern States, especially within the past two years, is a matter that excites wonder at home as well as abroad.

Mutuality of interests renders the North as necessary to the South in the development of her resources as steel to flint in the production of fire, and the combined forces of these two sections are laying the foundation of a future industrial wealth in the South, so vast and mighty, that human conception is inadequate to forecast at the present day, its magnitude and power.

The spirit of activity which was awakened in the Southern people during the war—the vigor and reach of capacity which characterized them at that period still lives, and is turned in all its vigour and persistence to the development of the magnificent and limitless variety of resources which so abound throughout her favored land; and the question whether the South possessed the energy and enterprise, the ability and ambition to achieve greatness through her wonderful natural advantages, is being answered.

The alarm of enthusiasm is ringing throughout her vast domain—people are roused to enterprise and competition by the contagion of success, and will crowd where the situation is tempting, until the South will be peopled to the measure of its means of subsistence; and those means are almost infinite.

A distinguished advantage of some of the Southern States is that they are bordered by seas, or traversed by rivers, which give the greatest scope and facility to commerce.

Land, earth and water abound in visible means of wealth, and hold wealth undeveloped, unsuspected, undreamed of—for all the discoveries of industries, and all the inventions, and all the different contrivances which serve to increase manufactures, and to perfect mechanical appliances, are but the prolongation of threads which conduct to other discoveries and other inventions; for the materials of commerce seem to accumulate without any determinate limit, and the mechanical appliances to prove them may admit of perpetual refinement, as no measure of fortune or degree of skill is found to diminish the necessities or requirements of life.

The South with her plentiful store of material will be able to meet these ever-extending, ever-refining necessities in all their varying character; and in this vast field of enterprise she will grandly demonstrate how "Peace hath her victories."—Nashville Banner.

Governor elect Cleveland takes a sensible and practicable view of the late election, one that should be accepted by Democrats everywhere.

A banquet was given in his honor by the Manhattan Club in New York Tuesday evening. General Hancock and staff were among the guests.

Governor Cleveland, in his speech, boasted of not "grand triumph of Democratic principles."

On the contrary, he put the case as it is. He said: "I am certain that the late demonstration did not spring from any pre-existing love for the party which was called to power, nor did the people place the affairs of State in our hands to be by them forgotten. They voted for themselves and in their own interests. If we retain their confidence we must deserve it, and we may be sure they will call on us to give an account of our stewardship."

—Memphis Ledger.

't is said Savage has counted noses and secured pledges from thirty low-tax Readjusters in the House and Senate, that they are for him to the bitter end and eternally against a caucus.

Savage and Bate are preparing—so rumor hath it—to join forces.

Savage is for anything or anybody to beat Harris. Some of his supporters are trying to form a combination with the Republicans to elect him to the Senate.

They say they would even unite with the Republicans on Judge East, or some such man, rather than see Harris become his own successor.

This winter, at Nashville, promises to be a very lively one. Savage is determined to run the machine or smash it. His following will antagonize and finally defeat all efforts to pass a 50-3 debt settlement.

—Chattanooga Times.

Secretary Folger thus humorously explains the current stories about his alleged resignation: "I told the President that I was resigned—to the result of the late election in New York, and he accepted my resignation."

Falling.

That is what a great many people are doing.

They don't know just what the matter is, but they have a combination of pains and aches, and each month they grow worse.

The only sure remedy yet found is Brown's Iron Bitters, and this by rapid and thorough assimilation with the blood purifies and enriches it, and rich, strong blood flowing to every part of the system repairs the wasted tissues, drives out disease and gives health and strength.

This is why Brown's Iron Bitters will cure kidney and liver diseases, consumption, rheumatism, neuralgia, dyspepsia, malaria, intermittent fevers, &c.

I was a great sufferer from Dyspepsia, and for several weeks could eat nothing and was growing weaker every day.

I tried Brown's Iron Bitters, and am happy to say I now have a good appetite, and am getting stronger.

JOS. McCRAWLEY.

Brown's Iron Bitters is not a drink and does not contain whiskey. It is the only preparation of Iron that causes no injurious effects. Get the genuine. Don't be imposed on with imitations.
